Digitalization, social justice and transforming societies

Taking education, health, social work and other practices forward

Global crises - ecological, social, and economic – are posing challenges to societies and, at the same time, digitalisation is transforming our lives by creating both opportunities and challenges. In this context, participative and reflective research is gaining in importance. In which ways can action research help address these challenges?

We invite contributions from the entire spectrum of action research in the contexts of education, social work, community development, the arts and others. Conceptual and theoretical positions, reflected experiences and research results are welcome. In addition to papers and symposia, workshops including participation and creative approaches will be particularly appreciated.
